Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: ...brigade, and marched to Red House, on the Kanawha river, where it was ordered to make a reconnoissance, for the purpose of discovering the rebel position. It performed gallant duty at Scarytown, W. Va., where Colonel Morton led the forces in a successful bayonet charge, he receiving a painful wound through the hips. The enemy were re-enforced and advanced their column, capturing Colonel Morton and Lieutenant Brown, of the Twelfth O. V. I., who remained with the colonel and the other wounded. Its loss in this battle was two brave men killed, two mortally wounded, and a number slightly wounded. It remained in the field under Lieutenant Colonel Niebling until ordered home to be mustered out of service, which occurred August 12, 1861, at Columbus, Ohio, by T. J. Cram, Major Topographical Engineers, mustering officer. Its casualties during its term of service were four men killed in battle, three drowned, and eight died of disease. Under the president's call for 300,000 troops, the state promptly transferred it into the United States service, but before the general government could pay it, covering its period of service from date of acceptance by the governor of Ohio, it became necessary for congress to enact the following legislation for the relief of Ohio volunteers: "whereas, The war department has decided that the term of service of the ninety days' volunteers called out under the act of seventeen hundred and ninetyfive, commenced only on the day that they were actually sworn into the service of the United States: and "whereas, The troops now in the service of the United States from the state of Ohio were not sworn into said service until some days after their organization and acceptance as companies by the governor of said state, and that for such...
